

MAKE IMAGES THAT STAY

12 Cinematic Calibrations for Creators
in a Scroll World

AYLON BEN-AMI

ATTENTION / IMAGE / CUT / TIME / SOUND / FEELING

00:00 / 00:23

THE FEED SCROLLS. CINEMA STAYS.

The strongest creators understand both.

You can make work for the feed without letting the feed make the work.

Every camera is a cinema camera. What matters is the cinematic mind: one that can make light, time, sound, cuts, and empty space carry meaning before a caption ever has to.

The feed moves fast. Your work does not have to disappear with it.

TAKE ONE IDEA. MAKE ONE TEST.

Each idea is intentionally small.

Read it. Make a 10-30 second experiment. Watch it once with sound and once without.

Ask what it makes you notice.

THE MOTTO OF THE BOOK

IF A TECHNIQUE
BECOMES VISIBLE
BEFORE THE FEELING,
SIMPLIFY IT.

SPEED IS NOT ATTENTION

01

THE IDEA

Fast cutting can create energy. It cannot create attention by itself.

Attention begins when the viewer feels that something inside the frame is worth staying with.

TRY THIS

CAL / TAKE 01

Choose a simple action and resist cutting at the obvious moment.

Stay long enough to see what happens before, during, and just after the action. Let the change happen inside the frame.

LENGTH 10-30 SEC

WATCH WITH SOUND

WATCH MUTED

EXAMPLE

Two people hug goodbye. They separate. That feels like the cut. Hold the shot.

They both start walking in the same direction. Now they have to keep walking together after already saying goodbye.

Give the moment a chance to reveal itself and you might not have to force the moment.

THE FRAME IS A DECISION

02

THE IDEA

A frame is a biased box. It declares what exists, what is excluded, and where the viewer is allowed to stand.

Every frame takes a position.

TRY THIS

CAL / TAKE 01

Before recording, move the camera to three positions.
Pick the one that changes the emotional relationship, not just the prettiest angle.

LENGTH 10-30 SEC

WATCH WITH SOUND

WATCH MUTED

EXAMPLE

Film a person waiting for a text: once centered, once trapped at the edge, once through a doorway.

Same action. Three different inner lives.

The frame does part of the thinking.